Now under the administration of the National Trust for Scotland (1979), the island was a druid shrine long before St Columba landed there in 563. Known originally as "Hy", then "Iona insula", the monastery that St. Columba and his 12 companions founded on Iona served as their base as they sought to convert Scotland to Christianity. The monastery on Iona was destroyed on more than one occasion by Vikings, but it was always rebuilt. The chancel and parts of the 13th century Norman chapel are still intact. Many Scottish kings and chiefs, including Macbeth, were buried in Iona

He was at this time at the height of his powers. He spent most of his reformation years preaching from the pulpit in the cathedral's Thistle Chapel. A higher testimony to the worth of a man not without faults was pronounced at his grave in the churchyard of St. Giles by the Earl of Mortoun, the regent of Scotland, in the presence of an immense funeral procession, who had followed the body to its last resting-place: "Here lyeth a man who in his life never feared the face of man, who hath been often threatened with dagger, but yet hath ended his days in peace and honor"
